Some days it's hope. Other days it's spite.

No amount of effort aside from surgery is going to make my dark circles and eye bags go away. I've had them since I was a kid. It will cost thousands to fix my crooked teeth, money I don't have. Clothes that fit well also cost money, and at 4 feet, 10.5 inches on a budget it's a crap shoot at best to find something that actually flatters my figure.

And anyhow, I don't owe anyone "my best efforts" at being attractive. If they don't like me when I look like shit, they don't like me.

Mine just... went away. First appeared on my neck at 17 and had multiple other patches come and go over the years but the neck one stayed with me, until a few years ago it just slowly faded and never came back. I've been eczema free since then and I have no earthly idea what I did to make it happen.

I didn't realize that I'd never heard the words "I love you" from my mother until the first time she said them. I was 17 and she wasn't sober.

Mindfulness. And it sucks. It's a bitch

It abandons you when you need it most. But when you remember, when it's there, it makes all the difference.

Trying to leave the world a better place than you found it, try to make it a more fair, more beautiful, more peaceful place for those who come after us

I totally understand this sentiment, I spent so long looking for a sushi place that was a food truck I didn't know existed. I'm really glad I discovered it though, they have my favorite roll that I can't seem to find anywhere.

This is the exact reason I've never gone. No one is going to pay my bills when I'm away and I'll lose everything I've worked for while I'm in there. No point going in if I'll be homeless when I get out.
